Additional concentration notes (e.g., estimated enrollment, advising plans, etc.)

Currently there are about 20 students in the Social Justice concentration, so there are enough seats for them in UP 160, which is currently offered in the spring term. The department will revisit seat limits and consider expanding the course in the future if needed.

Program Description and Justification

Justification for proposal change:

UP160 is a new class for spring 2020 that provides a better introduction to the social justice concentration. The course focuses on how resurgent racialization practices, policies and persistent process of institutional racism impact urban communities that have historically been denied equal access to economic benefits, adequate infrastructure and political capital. Specifically, we explore the visible racial conflicts in American cities as sites to expose and explain the deeper and often invisible spatial segregation and social inequalities of race, class and gender upon which they rely. UP 260 will still be available to students in the concentration as a concentration elective option, which will add an additional option for the 'select 2' section. This change does not alter the number of credit hours required for the concentration.
